6) SUMMARY OF MAIN RESEARCH AREAS

My scientific research activity has been mainly focused on Gynecology, with particular interest on the following fields:

Urogynecology

My research has primarily focused on the use of pelvic floor ultrasound. The clinical and diagnostic application of ultrasound in female urinary incontinence and pelvic organ prolapse has opened new research avenues to study the functional pelvic anatomy.

During my research activity at the Department of Obstetrics and Gynecology of the University of Mainz, clinical studies the impact of vaginal delivery on the morphology of female pelvic floor muscles, particularly the levator ani muscle have been carried out. These studies aimed to improve the understanding of the etiology and pathophysiology of genital prolapse, and to enhance preventive measures, especially in obstetrics.

Further studies addressed surgical treatments for urinary incontinence and pelvic organ prolapse, with a specific interest in new prosthetic materials and the reduced invasiveness of third-generation mid-urethral slings.

Relevant research has also employed proteomic analysis to better understand the pathophysiology of stress urinary incontinence, as well as studies to identify risk factors influencing surgical success in such cases.

Urodynamic assessment has been investigated in patients with deep endometriosis and in cervical cancer patients, particularly to evaluate urinary, anorectal, and sexual function following radical surgery.

Additional areas of interest included congenital pelvic floor malformations, their surgical management, and their psychological and sexual implications.

Pharmacological and hormonal treatments for urgency and stress urinary incontinence have also been studied.

Gynecological Ultrasound

Research into pelvic floor ultrasound fostered my interest in expanding my expertise in the application of ultrasound in gynecologic oncology and endometriosis, facilitated by the use of advanced imaging technologies.

As part of the practical training for the II Level Master in Gynecologic Ultrasound, I developed a novel research protocol for the sonographic evaluation of the uterosacral ligaments using radiomic ultrasound models. The objective is to support surgical decision-making in women with pelvic organ prolapse. This protocol has been submitted to the Ethics Committee of the Medical University of Vienna and is currently awaiting approval.

I am also collaborating with the Department of Gynecologic Ultrasound at Gemelli University Hospital in Rome on four studies:

- two involving new radiomic models applied to ultrasound evaluation of ovarian masses in BRCA-mutated patients and localized cervical cancer,
- one focusing on the use of ultrasound in gestational trophoblastic disease,
- and one on the sonographic characterization of STUMPs (Uterine Smooth Muscle Tumors of Uncertain Malignant Potential).

Gynecologic Oncology

Since my residency, I have been particularly interested in cervical cancer, including its natural history during pregnancy and the effects of radical laparoscopic surgery on urinary, anorectal, and sexual function compared to traditional surgery.

Further studies investigated bladder function following radical surgery for cervical cancer and recurrence rates after laparoscopic versus open abdominal approaches.

My current research interest lies in the application of ultrasound-based radiomic models to improve diagnosis and prevention in gynecologic malignancies.

Endocrinology

From March 2011 to May 2012, I served as Principal Investigator of a Phase I clinical trial evaluating the safety, pharmacokinetics, and efficacy of the drug PDC31 (a prostaglandin receptor antagonist) in patients with primary dysmenorrhea at the Department of Obstetrics and Gynecology, University of Mainz, Germany.

This trial, one of the few Phase I studies conducted in Germany, aimed to determine a safe and effective dose of this novel compound for both dysmenorrhea and preterm labor.

The study required meticulous patient recruitment, intrauterine pressure monitoring using a dedicated catheter before, during, and after drug administration, and coordination with intensive care units for continuous vital sign monitoring during infusion. Serial blood sampling was performed for up to 24 hours to assess the drug's pharmacokinetics.

The study was conducted with rigor and precision, and received praise and formal recognition from the German Federal Institute for Drugs and Medical Devices (BfArM).
